UK Outlook for Friday 26 Mar 2021 to Sunday 4 Apr 2021:
A cold interlude on Friday, with rain, showers and strong winds affecting most of the U.K. Some of these showers could turn wintry for a time, especially over higher ground but not confined to. Bands of rain are then likely to continue to move in from the northwest, with the heaviest rain across northern and western parts of the UK. The best of any settled weather will be in southeastern areas, though rain could reach here at times. The strongest winds are likely to be across far northern and northwestern areas, with winds possibly being from fresh to strong across other parts too. Temperatures are expected to be near to or a little above average, although short-lived cooler interludes could occur.
